Chapter 1 by Sidney

February 14, he thought to himself as he flipped through his calendar on the wall.

"I wonder how that's gonna be this year." with a cup of coffee on his left and an arrow on his right, he headed to his balcony.

Eyeing passer-bys on the streets he thought about how men fell so easily in love.

When was the last time he felt that way, he mused and sipped his cup.

He fetched for his bow, fixed his arrow into it, and aimed for the man sitting right next to a lady.

"What an extraordinary thought, the master who has never experienced how it is to fall in love."

Chapter 2 by Lucy Semmelmeier

As he nocked his arrow, the wind caused him to lose his balance. The arrow swung around and pierced him in the stomach. The other arrow went straight into the girl. Through his fuzzy vision, he could see the girl blinking confusedly. She swung her knees and looked up at him, a big goofy smile on her face. He found his impulses wanting to return her gooey gaze, to this girl... Josefina.
